ISTANBUL — Russia and Turkey agreed Tuesday on a plan to push Syrian Kurdish fighters (敘利亞庫德戰士) from a wide swath of territory just south of Turkey's border, cementing Russian President Vladimir Putin's eminent role in Syria as U.S. troops depart and America's influence wanes.

The agreement, reached after an hours-long meeting between Putin and Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan in the Black Sea resort town of Sochi, will leave Turkey and Russia in control of territory formerly held by Kurdish forces once allied with the United States.
