They don't have to actually buy a paper copy of the document. With e-mails, people don't need to use paper to send and receive letters and messages. Furthermore, the writing and editing process is done on a computer, and therefore people don't need to use paper.

But there are people who believe that a paperless society will not become a reality despite the usefulness of the Internet and e-mail. Many people still use paper because both the Internet and e-mail can be a vehicle for viruses to spread. Other people rely only on paper for important documents because of privacy concerns. They are worried that their personal messages might be read by someone else.
