Panda babies are weak and need tremendous care. When pandas are born, they are very small and delicate. Their average weight at birth is only about 90 grams. Panda babies are actually smaller than a mouse. They cannot see or walk. Even though they receive close attention, panda babies die easily. According to a recent medical study, 61 percent of the pandas that are born in zoos die soon after birth. The number could be worse if we did nothing. In China, and in zoos all over the world, people are trying to help pandas have healthy babies. The reason is that the panda is an endangered species. There are almost no pandas left in the wild. However, we are getting better at helping pandas have healthy children. This year nine zoo pandas have had a baby so far, and ten more are pregnant. Maybe one day the panda won't be an endangered species anymore.
