The woman who accused Seoul’s mayor of sexual harassment says the city government told her he wasn’t “that kind of person” when she made her complaint, according to two non-profit organizations working with her.

Park Won-soon(朴元淳), 64, died in an apparent suicide last week shortly after the sexual harassment claims were filed with police, meaning that the victim’s claims won’t be criminally investigated.

But the accusations of Park’s former secretary have sparked a firestorm among women’s rights groups in South Korea, and raised questions over how seriously sexual harassment is really taken by President Moon Jae-in(文在寅), who campaigned on the promise of becoming a “feminist president.”
