After the operation was done, my mother asked my father whether he heard what the nurse said or not. “I did,” my father replied, “and I thought she was talking to you.”

Days after staying in the hospital, my father could finally go home. On the way home, my mother asked my father what the most uncomfortable thing he had during his stay. “The food, of course.” My mother looked at my father with a smile, thinking what she was going to fix for him. Then, my father continued, in a very philosophical tone, “If I have to eat that kind of food, why do I have to stay in the hospital?” That evening, we had McDonald’s.
