It's natural and normal that wild animals stay away from humans. However, a study showed that in Australia, there is a particular group of kangaroos which “talked” to people. Scientists gave them a sealed container with food inside. The kangaroos tried to communicate with the scientists by looking at the scientists and then looking back at food when they were unable to open the container. It was obvious that the kangaroos were requesting for help. The scientists were very surprised about that.
