　　Amazon launches a new payment system for brick-and-mortar stores. The Amazon One scanner enrolls the images of users' palms, so the users just need to wave their hands for about a second and payment is made completely. Moreover, the security level is comparable to a fingerprint scan, but the palm scan could be used at a distance of few inches what makes it more practical.

　　Dr. Basel Halak explained that "Palm-based identification is based on capturing the vein patterns of the palm. The patters are different for each finger and for each person, and as they are hidden underneath the skin's surface, forgery is extremely difficult."
