On the way back, I talked to the old classmate sitting next to me. “Why didn’t the monk explain his meaning more clearly? Then it wouldn’t take us forty years to figure it out.” My classmate replied. “Forty years ago, even if the monk had told us exactly what he meant, would you have had the spiritual sensitivity to understand?” Actually, I wasn’t the only one who wouldn’t have understood. Back then, we were just kids. How could we have understood words of such deep philosophical meaning? No wonder he didn’t make himself clear. I have a feeling that he must have known we would come back forty years later. And on that day, we’d be able to understand.
