One day when I was working in the fields, the village leader showed up with a well-dressed man I had never seen before. The man walked up to me, touched my arms, and then even asked me to open my mouth to have a look at my teeth. I felt a little bit humiliated, but I didn't dare to show it in front of the village leader. Everyone in the village respected him because he could read. He owned a bike and he often solved problems for the village.

That night, my dad told me that a construction company from the city had come to our village to look for workers. They had their eyes on me. That's why the man had come to make sure if I was tough enough. Actually, I had been strong, and I had moved lots of bricks that made me even stronger. Therefore, I was able to take the chance and get the job undoubtedly.
