“Budaixi” has been a distinguished form of performing arts in Taiwan. It is a kind of puppet show. Although they are hand puppets, the figures appear as complete forms, with hands and feet, on an elaborately decorated stage. The puppet performance is typically accompanied by a small orchestra. The backstage music is directed by the drum player. The drummer needs to pay attention to what is going on in the plot and follow the rhythm of the characters. He also uses the drum to guide the other musicians. There are generally around four to five musicians who perform the backstage music. The form of music used is often associated with various performance techniques, including acrobatics and skills like window-jumping, stage movement, and fighting. Sometimes unusual puppets also appear on stage for extra appeal, especially for children in the audience.
