Just like there are aboriginal people in Lanyu, there are also aboriginal people in New Zealand. They are called the “Maori,” which means “the group of land.” About 1,000 years ago, they went to the New Zealand Island and started to live there. Maori people are good hunters and artists. They hunt for food in the wild. They dance and sing to show that they are thankful to God. They also pray for a big catch. Maori people have tattoos on their bodies. Men usually have tattoos on their faces and legs while women put tattoos on the lips and jaws. The tattoos show how important a person is among the people. Older people usually have more or bigger tattoos than younger people.
