Sure enough, just like what the policemen had judged, the student lived in a very posh building. Nobody could get in or use the elevator without an access card. The living room was very luxurious. He has a brand-new bicycle, expensive speakers and computer system attested that he was one of those kids who owned a lot. His mom was not home when we arrived. I called his mom earlier to let her know that her son had been found. His mom sounded quite peaceful as if it was not a serious matter whether her son was found or not. The student might feel a little bit embarrassed to be alone with me in a large house. He started to try to say something with me. “My mom and dad got divorced a few years ago.” He told me.
