I've been plagued with frozen shoulder for nearly five years. Every morning when I wake up, my first sensation is a dull pain in my left arm. Today, however, I felt no sensation at all. Instead, I felt like on cloud nine in the morning. Outside the window, the sky was remarkable blue. A gentle breeze blew in, carrying with the fragrance of laurel blossoms. What surprised me the most was that my wife cooked breakfast for me this morning! When I asked my wife to cook breakfast for me a few years ago, she refused me without second thought. "A good morning's sleep is a sacred and inviolable human right. You shall prepare breakfast by yourself." She said resolutely.
