Thirty years ago, I was sent to America to pick up a computer that my company had ordered. Getting a computer was a big deal at that time. My coworkers and I needed to receive three weeks of training. Our company arranged a unique hotel for us. The hotel was located in Washington. It was surrounded by a garden beside the shore. The white color of the hotel was a vintage example of colonial architecture. To me, the most memorable was its furniture, which was well preserved in the elegant colonial style.
