Every night at seven o'clock, a dinner bell would ring, and all the guests would come downstairs together to eat. The majority of the guests were young. A couple was there on their honeymoon. The hostess of the hotel always dined with us. We always chatted with each other, which made the atmosphere quite pleasant. We talked about the culture, job, life, and everything. The Southern flavor of the food there was distinctive. Actually, I didn't like American cuisine, but I relished every dinner I ate there.
