Unexpectedly, King Charles III, with full military uniform, entered the parliament while it was in session. He claimed that he came to dissolve the House of Commons, by using an ancient power of the King which existed four hundred years ago. He asked the Speaker of the House whether he agreed or not. The speaker was an old fellow. He, facing such a crisis, panicked. After consulting some ministers, he admitted that the King did have the power although no king has ever used this power over four hundred years. Accordingly, he proclaimed that the House of Commons was dissolved.
