That was the first time I saw the boy. The boy was dark-skinned, probably thirteen or fourteen years old, and was obviously from Central or South America. He wore a T-shirt and was always sauntering leisurely around the campus. I didn't understand why he was always alone. In America, individualism may be fashionable, but being a loner isn't. Young people tend to travel in groups. He was the first person I'd ever seen who always walked alone.

saunter 閒步、閒逛
