But I still had one puzzle: Why did he talk so much? He laughed. He said that he frequently went to other people's homes to do decoration work and found that the owners were seldom willing to talk to him. They thought workers should simply work quietly. This time, he deliberately tested me. If I indeed concerned about the weak, I should be willing to talk to workers and would not keep a distance from them. When I was concerned about him, he was a student. It is natural for a teacher to be concerned about a student. Now he was a worker. He supposed if I were truly a good person, I should still talk to him.
