In some countries, such as Czech Republic, many restaurant owners threw away their food rather than help Baptiste. Yet in the country's capital, Prague, he luckily received an untouched dish because it was a wrong order. Baptiste, who is studying various methods to reduce food waste, also gave talks to schools to raise public attention about this issue. Current studies show that 90 million tons of food are wasted every year in Europe. To fight this, Baptiste hopes to cooperate with business as to help cut down their food waste.
