I like to accompany my mother to the market to shop. But my mother doesn't like me to follow her because I would take the opportunity to ask her to buy something for me. This day, my mother was going to the market. I held her hand and asked her to take me with her. She agreed. People came and went in the market; my mother bought pork, fish, and vegetables. Those aunts of the stalls praised me for being clever and sensible, and I felt very bashful while hearing that. At this time, I heard my mother replied, "She is a cry-baby and follower. Taking her out costs more money."
