Many farmers rely on selling their chickens to make ends meet. The problem is that leopard cats will often kill and eat the farmers' chickens. In response, the farmers set traps and leave poison outside to try and kill the problematic leopard cats. The government is planning to provide a subsidy for farmers to help them mend their chicken cages and make up for the monetary loss of the chickens that are eaten by leopard cats. In addition, a subsidy of NT$20,000-$30,000 per hectare is also proposed for those farmers who use eco-friendly farming methods, such as those without pesticides or harmful chemicals.
