There are two extremes of drivers behind the wheel today. The first type is the unsafe drivers, who disregard traffic regulations and make life difficult for other drivers and people walking in the street. Unsafe drivers do everything behind the wheel but pay attention. They eat, talk, watch the scenery, light cigarettes, and search for things in their pockets. They are inconsiderate; they slow down or speed up as they wish just to annoy other drivers. Above all, they are reckless and often cause accidents.

In sharp contrast are the safe drivers, who always follow this rule: Keep your mind on your driving and both hands on the wheel. They obey traffic regulations and practice the courtesy of the road. Aware of the rights and desires of others, they are always considerate of other drivers and people walking in the street. They are careful drivers, who signal and do not take chances. Often it is the alert drivers who, through quick action, are able to prevent a dangerous situation from turning into a bad accident.
